BY PHILLIP VANDERDECKEN.

Why I have you? Why I love you? Tout'e'n nuzzler, little wife:-It's a question I heve never Thought upon in ell my life, I can't gives single reason-Though I know the fact full well That I have you very dearly, Why I love, I cannot tell.

You are no proud, high-horn beauty, Heroine of old romance;— Never Knightly gallant for you Crossed a sword or broke a lance; Merer crewd of naxious suitore, For your favor bent the knee; You're no theen of Hearts, my Sovereign Queen of only me.

You are nestrong-minded weman, Ink-stnined to the finger tips, Never word of Greek or Latin; Praced those little roey lips; Never call from Heaven cent you Don Quixoue like to roam; This your only mission, Bessie, To tanke glad one heart and home.

You have none of all the graces, Novel berges most affect; Your's is not the face or ligure Charles Augustus would select; You are only simple Bessie, Gentle, trusting, loving wife: Yet your coming was the coming Of the augel of my life.

For the g osis of hopes that haunted All the reatless years before, When you crossed the threshold, Bese Passed beyond the open door: Care and evil vanished, conquered By the love-light in your eye; Truer life and love bas won my, Tho' I cannot tell you why.

Why do you, my darling Bessie, Lave the aunshine, love the flowers? Love the quiet and the stillness Of this little home of ours? Would you snalyze all pleasure. As the mehin hrenks his toy! While you learn the secret of it,

You will lose the aubtle joy.

Why I love you? Why I love you? Never ask the question more, I can only answer simply As I answered you before, That I love you, dealest Beaste, Love you only, love you well; That is more than I can tell.
